One year Veterinary Clinical Pathology post-doctoral fellowship at Colorado State University

We are pleased to announce a one year fellowship/instructor position at Colorado State University beginning July 1, 2014. This position is intended for people recently finishing a clinical pathology residency and that are interested in refining their diagnostic, teaching, and investigative skills. It is a 90% position so that 10% of the year can be spent studying for boards (5 weeks). The position will include a combination of half and full days on our busy clinical pathology service for 27-30 weeks. Service includes cytological evaluation for cases from the VTH and outside submissions, hematology review, and training of clinical pathology residents as well as student, intern, and resident visitors rotating through the lab. The daily caseload is shared with another clinical pathologist who is also available for consultation. Teaching responsibilities will include 5 weeks of junior practicum laboratories (3 sessions each week), participation in Microscopy Seminar that is combined with anatomic and comparative medicine residents and faculty, a journal review course, and weekly clinical pathology rounds. Didactic lecturing to second year PVM students within the core clinical pathology course is negotiable. During times not scheduled for service or teaching there will be opportunities to work on defined research projects and/or publications. One week, as well as financial support, is available for the purpose of attending the ACVP/ASVCP Annual Meeting. A salary of $45,000 with additional fringe benefits is offered, based on 90% of a $50,000 base. Qualifications are a DVM or equivalent veterinary professional degree and board eligibility for the ACVP certification exam in clinical pathology. Reflecting departmental and institutional values, candidates are expected to have the ability to advance the Department’s commitment to diversity and inclusion.
